Florida Department of Education (FDOE) FAQ and Responses

When does the teaching/instruction begin?

Five hours of instruction must occur during the 2023-2024 school year.

Is the requirement of five hours total from grades 6-12, or five hours per year?

A minimum of five hours is required for each student each year while in grades 6-12.

Are we correct in assuming that by requiring a minimum of five hours annually, students will have received at least 35 hours of resiliency education instruction when they graduate high school?

Yes.

Are students allowed to “waive” or be excused from this instruction? Are parents allowed to request that their child not participate in this instruction?

There is no statutory waiver option at this time.

Are districts expected to develop their own curriculum for each grade level or will the FDOE be providing/recommending specific curriculum/resources suitable to each grade level?

Curriculum choices are made at the district level. FDOE’s Office of Healthy Schools will be developing a list of no-cost resources and will share this with school districts at a later date.

How should students participating in full-time dual enrollment receive instruction in Resiliency Education: Civic and Character Education and Life Skills Education?

For students who are full-time dual enrolled or early admit, districts must make arrangements to ensure those students participate with their cohort. CCPS provides an online platform for students in dual enrollment or hospitalized homebound to complete the resiliency education requirements.
